Historically, March is an important month in the federal budget process. By this time of the year, the President has laid out his priorities in the annual State of the Union speech, released the Administration's federal budget proposal, and congressional committees have begun holding hearings on the viability of those recommendations as well as developing their own budget proposals. How this process works with the federal transportation program is a complex relationship. This webinar will help unravel that relationship, as well as highlight nationwide trends in transportation funding proposals and offer information on regional opportunities currently supported by NARC.
