
Volunteer Corner – Jen’s story cont.

After moving to Chicago a few years ago, I started looking for organizations that I could get involved in. When an individual from Caris got up and spoke about the organization at the church I attend, it realized that I wanted to be a part of Caris.

Volunteering for Caris at the Near West site has been an amazing, humbling opportunity. It is truly incredible to see and hear the lives of young women being changed by people who care about them and want to make a difference in their lives. This experience has opened my eyes to a lot of the brokenness of this world, but also to the hope that one person can make a difference in the lives of many.
