Don't Get Sick After June:
Documentary Film and Discussion

Tuesday, November 27, 2018 | 12-1:30 pm
Robbins Building, E401, 2210 Circle Drive

This documentary presents a troubling portrait - and indictment - of the U.S. government's dismal failure to provide health care in fulfillment of federal treaty and trustee obligations with American Indian nations. Bringing forth an important voice in the national dialogue on health justice, the film reveals powerful images and stories from some of the most vulnerable communities in Indian Country, provides historical evidence of just how poorly health care services have been funded and managed, and offers a critical look at the alarming increase in poor health outcomes as food commodities have supplanted traditional Native diets.
