The crisis that has unfolded around Iran in recent weeks has seen equal measures of tragedy and criminal irresponsibility. The accidental shooting down of the civilian flight with its terrible loss of life has touched us all, and our hearts go out to those affected. This is a devastating reminder of how war affects the innocent and we renew our commitment to working for peace through diplomatic and negotiated solutions. This tragic accident was a direct result of the heightened regional tension following the US killing of Iranian general Qasem Soleimani and six others in a drone strike in Iraq. This was an act of state terrorism – extra-judicial killings that are illegal under international law. The US acted as a rogue state and our government’s support for this crime – on the basis of the US right to self-defence – makes a mockery of international legal norms.

The US has a long history of intervention in the Middle East and of hostility to Iran, but at the heart of these recent developments lies Trump’s trashing of the Iran nuclear deal. This was agreed in 2015 under the leadership of President
Obama and signed by Iran, the US, UK, Russia, China, France and Germany. The deal ensured restraints on the Iranian civil nuclear programme to prevent any possible military developments, and in exchange sanctions on Iran were lifted. Trump pulled the US out in 2018, saying it was ‘the worst deal ever’, but in fact it was completely effective in its aims and Iran was in full compliance and other signatories continue to support it.

Clearly Trump pulled out for other reasons, most likely that Iran’s economy was recovering with the sanctions lifted and it was re-emerging as a regional power. Boris Johnson suggests a different motivation – that Trump doesn’t like it because it was negotiated by Obama. In a recent interview the prime minister said, “Let’s replace it and let’s replace it with the Trump deal.” If it wasn’t such a dangerous situation this would really be laughable – the politics of the playground writ large: never mind the content, he just wants his name on it.

But Trump and his supporters – in Downing Street and elsewhere – are really playing with fire. The great danger now is that Iran will finally decide that it needs to develop nuclear weapons to ensure its own security – much as North Korea did when it found itself part of Bush’s Axis of Evil. It is profoundly to be hoped that it does not do so.

If the international community values peace and security – and indeed the future of our planet – then it must act to reign in Trump and put a stop to his fast track to disaster. Particular pressure needs to be applied to our government to prevent Johnson just becoming a cheer leader for US actions. Strengthening the movement against war on Iran is crucial and we were very pleased to co-organise the recent No War on Iran demonstration in London.

Many CND groups were active in lobbying their election candidates at the end of year. Bath CND, for example, arranged a local hustings meeting to make sure all the candidates were properly grilled on the issues of nuclear weapons and war. This was just one of many interesting initiatives the group was involved with in 2019.

If you are a CND member or supporter who lives in the Bath area and want to find out what the group has in store for 2020, then they would be delighted to hear from you.

Ban treaty to enter into force?

CND Campaigns Officer Sara Medi Jones looks at what developments we can expect in 2020 in regard to international nuclear disarmament.

While the start of this new decade hasn’t been the most peaceful, it can be reassuring to remember that there is some good news to be shared. A new generation of activists has been mobilised by the climate protests, medical developments showed huge progress in 2019 in the battle against Aids and malaria in particular and for anti-nuclear campaigners, we could soon see the entry into force of a UN treaty banning nuclear weapons.

From its founding meeting, CND has championed the global abolition of nuclear weapons. Britain’s Trident nuclear weapons system is a relatively small part of a massive global problem. For many years we have argued that nuclear weapons must be banned in the same way that chemical and biological weapons have been banned – or more recently cluster munitions and landmines have been outlawed.

And in 2017 we celebrated as the United Nations adopted the historic Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW), supported by 122 countries. In fact, the 2017 Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons (ICAN), of which CND is a partner organisation, for our work in campaigning for this momentous achievement. The treaty will make it illegal under international law for its signatories to develop, test, possess, use or threaten to use nuclear weapons. It will enter into force when ratified by 50 states. At the time of writing, 34 countries have ratified the TPNW while 80 have signed.

International campaigners are confident that 2020 will be the year that we achieve the necessary 50 ratifications. This will be a momentous event, one we should enjoy as campaigners, and a giant step forward on the road towards global abolition. The treaty is a significant pointer towards changing international attitudes to nuclear weapons and could help stigmatise them in the minds of the public.

But what would this mean in practice for the nuclear weapons states, including the UK? When the TPNW was negotiated, our government boycotted the talks and of course, it plans to build a new £205 billion nuclear weapons system.

We must do all we can to put this treaty right at the top of the political agenda. And very helpfully, there are provisions in the TPNW for nuclear states to sign up prior to disarmament, by removing their weapons from operational status and providing a detailed plan for getting rid of them.

Adding to the pressure on the nuclear states is the fact that towns and cities around the world are becoming Nuclear Ban Communities as they sign up to support the TPNW. Large cities including Washington D.C., Paris, Berlin and Edinburgh have all adopted motions declaring their support. Other towns and cities in the UK to join the campaign include Manchester, Norwich and Renfrewshire. CND is encouraging all our groups to raise this with their local councils in 2020 – see the Nuclear Ban Communities page on our website for more information.

Meet the staff

This month:
Ian Chamberlain,
CND Press and Communications Officer

“The press part of my job involves responding to journalist enquires about CND and our campaigns, and providing them with quotes, photos, facts and figures for their news stories. When there is news about Trident or nuclear power, I pitch articles to editors and I prepare press releases to send to journalists to make sure our perspective is covered in the stories they write.

I’m also responsible for CND’s social media channels, I produce videos, create graphics, I write most of the campaigns you receive from CND, as well as news items and articles for the CND web site. I also support local CND groups with their press and communications work.”
