FLIPPING the Classroom

JOIN US OCTOBER 16 @ 1:30 PM

What would a class look like if you stopped lecturing? Find out as Dr. Russell J. Mumper presents on his experience developing and teaching a “flipped” course.

WHEN: October 16, 2014 from 1:30 - 3:00 pm
WHERE: Procter Hall, Room 103
WHAT: A free guest presentation & discussion open to all UC faculty, staff, and students. This talk will describe the rationale and motivation for the flipped classroom, how it was developed, qualitative and quantitative outcomes, enhancements and outcomes, and his important personal and educational lessons learned.

For more information, contact christopher.edwards@uc.edu.

ABOUT DR. RUSSELL MUMPER

Dr. Mumper joined the University of Georgia as the Vice Provost for Academic Affairs in August, 2014 after serving for 15 years on the faculty of the UNC Eshelman School of Pharmacy and the College of Pharmacy at UNC-Chapel Hill and the University of Kentucky.

Dr. Mumper developed and taught, by lecturing, the majority of a Pharmaceutics course to pharmacy students in a PharmD program. In 2012, he stopped lecturing and “flipped” the entire course. Of the 162 students, 22 students attended the course via video-teleconference from two satellite campuses while the remaining 140 students met in a large lecture hall. Self-paced online videos using Echo360 classroom capture were off-loaded and the classroom was redesigned for active learning.