The family of detainee Ali Faisal, who is serving a five year prison sentence, said that their son is having epilepsy-like seizures.

According to human rights activist Enas Oun, Ali’s seizures come with shivering and a fever. Ali’s family confirms that he was healthy and did not suffer from any illness prior to his detention.

They explained that he started experiencing these symptoms after he was put in solitary confinement. The family holds the Ministry of Interior responsible for their son’s wellbeing and they have demanded to have Ali seen by a doctor before his condition deteriorates further.

In another case, Enas Oun stated that Fadhel Abbas al-Jazeeri, sentenced to seven years in prison, underwent a surgical operation to remove a bleeding gland at the end of his back. His wife said the injury was a result of the torture her husband suffered during the Jau Prison events in March 2015.

Al-Jazeeri’s wife denounced her husband’s immediate transfer to the prison following the operation, since he cannot sit or move and is in severe pain. Moreover, he wasn’t taken to his appointment to clean the wound.
